Photoshop is a bit like Microsoft Word and Microsoft Excel. Photoshop and Elements (or Photoshop Elements) are like a word processing or spreadsheet program. You can create text and images and layout a page or table. You can crop, align and resize images. You can create an animation or a video. You can edit multiple layers at once. And you can crop, scale or rotate an image with a single click. Photoshop and Elements are powerful but use complex tools and terminology. The hardware they run on is also more costly than a Chromebook. Use the keyboard shortcuts (Ctrl, Ctrl-X, etc.) to work with images. The keyboard shortcuts are available when you are in Photoshop's desktop editor, but not while you're editing an image. A keyboard shortcut can replace a mouse click or a keyboard button press. Many of the commands that you can execute in Photoshop are accessible with keyboard shortcuts. You can create a keyboard shortcut for any feature in Photoshop. Click your mouse on the name of the feature that you want to make a keyboard shortcut for, and choose "Create keyboard shortcut…" in the shortcut menu. You have the option of making a keyboard shortcut for a menu command. If you want to make a keyboard shortcut for an entire menu, not just for one command, choose "Create keyboard shortcut…" in the shortcut menu. If you're looking for more keyboard shortcuts, you'll find them here. (CIRCLED) -> Some of the shortcut keys that you can use in Photoshop. Correlation of hemoglobin level and hemoglobin-based oxygen carrier with survival rate and quality of life in advanced hematologic malignancies. Blood transfusions can prolong the survival of patients with advanced hematologic malignancies. However, transfusion is frequently needed for primary complications due to cancer or its treatment. Hemoglobin level is widely used to identify patients who are at a high risk of transfusion. Hemoglobin level is also used as a transfusion trigger. To avoid unnecessary transfusions, it is important to determine whether a low hemoglobin level is associated with poor survival and quality of life. Recent research has suggested that transmembrane hemoglobin-based oxygen carriers (HBOCs) may improve oxygen delivery in patients with advanced hematologic malignancies. We reviewed the risk of all-cause mortality and the quality of life of patients with advanced hematologic malignancies according to their hemoglobin and HBOC status. Among all advanced hematologic malignancies, low hemoglobin or the presence of Hb-based oxygen carrier (HBOC) is correlated with higher risk of mortality, but not with decreased quality of life.. Q: Dropbox and Google auth with Angular2 I am using Angular2-Dropbox authentication that I found here - It works perfect. And it has Angular's support too. Here is a example: // Angular component @Component({ selector:'my-app', template: 'Login' }) export class AppComponent { constructor() { } signIn() { this.dropbox.signInAsync('user@gmail.com','mypass', this.onTokenReceived, this.onAuthError).subscribe(result => { console.log(result); this.token = result.access_token; }, e => { console.log(e); }); } } // Dropbox callback function onTokenReceived = (result) => { console.log(result); } // Auth Error callback function onAuthError = (error) => { console.log(error); } But my question is how to get the access token from dropbox after it is signed. I suppose it has to be in the promise of the signin function. But how to get the token there? A: You can use the.then() promise of the signInAsync() function to access the result. signIn() { this.dropbox.signInAsync('user@gmail.com','mypass', this.onTokenReceived, this.onAuthError).then(result => { console.log(result.access_token); }); } Q: PHP comment syntax for initialize variables I am new in php.
