What's New in the CWCom?

Morse code is the only system to communicate without the benefit of writing, speech, and now cellular phones. It's probably the most challenging system to understand that of all the alternate means. Much like math, it's not based on what you see but what you feel. Morse code is composed of a series of dots and dashes. If you hear the dot “.” and dash “-”, what you actually hear is “--.” When using Morse code, the dash is always ahead of the dot. The dot (dot) often represents the actual message and the dash (dash) is simply a place holder in most cases. If you're wondering how the dots and dashes are shown in Morse code, a bit of history is needed. After your message is sent, the letters are easy to decode. Morse code can be used for writing, telegraphy, encryption, and their usage was even one of the first uses of computers. This is why Morse code is still widely used in the radio communication system.
