[Lithium-induced thyrotoxic crisis]. There is substantial controversy whether lithium induces thyrotoxicosis. According to recent reports, lithium-associated thyrotoxicosis (LAT) occurs in a small proportion of patients treated with lithium. Our report describes the clinical characteristics of LAT. LAT patients were identified among the thyroid dysfunction of hospital inpatients. We conducted a retrospective study of 28 inpatients with LAT. LAT was diagnosed when patients developed thyrotoxicosis as a complication of lithium treatment. We reviewed their clinical presentation, laboratory data, and therapeutic management. Twenty-eight inpatients (17 women and 11 men; mean age, 62.8 +/- 18.3 years) were diagnosed as having LAT. Clinical presentations included Graves' disease (16 cases), subacute thyroiditis (9 cases), and toxic nodular goiter (3 cases). Symptoms included rash (8 cases), myalgia (10 cases), fever (8 cases), heat intolerance (4 cases), and diarrhea (5 cases). Other associated features included fever (15 cases), lymphadenopathy (3 cases), and diarrhea (7 cases). Overt thyrotoxicosis developed abruptly within 6 months (range, 1-56 months; mean, 21.2 months) after the initiation of lithium treatment. Thyrotoxicosis was evident within one week after initiation of therapeutic reduction of lithium. Based on these results, we conclude that LAT may occur in patients treated with lithium for the long term. This complication should be included in the differential diagnosis of thyrotoxicosis in patients treated with lithium for psychiatric disorders.
