MSN Winks Remover For Windows

All right, we have installed MSN Winks Remover on our USB drive, and now let's test it to see if it works as we expected, and has the same features and usability of the original software we wanted to replace. We will access our default homepage to see if the winks are removed. We find that the MSN Winks Remover has the same exact same layout as the original, with only one important difference: the Winks button that opens a new window is greyed out, as the feature is unavailable. This is a shame, because the built-in Winks Remover function is not only limited, but also cannot be used in its primary function. When you click on the Winks button, an error window is shown, informing you that "Permission denied" We have also observed that new entries are added to the Microsoft Winks Folder (C:\Users\Username\AppData\Roaming\Microsoft\Winks), and also to the icon on the Start menu, as well as to the icon on the Desktop. The Start Menu looks very similar to the original one, and also has two new entries: Windows Winks Remover (as shown in the above image) and My Winks Remover. The latter appears when you open the previous folder to reveal a new folder called Contacts. The Contacts folder is not displayed when we access the My Winks folder. The same type of UI that you have in the original winker program, but you cannot change your winks. There is no more options to hide your winks, it is not possible to disable the My Winks Remover or the Windows Winks Remover, or even to uninstall it and delete the registry entries. When you open the Winks Folder it loads a form for your winks, and a list of the winks you have stored. Every time you open the Winks folder, you can see in the description field that a new winks has been added to the list of winks. The original program does not show the contents of the Winks folder, and therefore it is impossible to delete the winks from the list. The original WinKeeper program can not be installed and used on a USB flash disk or other external device. Installation of the original WinKeeper can be done in different ways, and it is necessary to install the entire program. For example, with the original method, installation can be done in the Control Panel
