Officials plan to tear down the home of a leopard on a Toronto street to make way for an eight-unit townhouse development. The owner of the home has been granted an exemption by the city's planning department so the property can be razed. "We have an owner who can't afford to renovate or rebuild — we're not going to force her, so we're just going to tear the whole thing down and build," said Ward 26 Councillor Joe Mihevc. The strata-title owners plan to replace the home — a long, skinny structure that originally featured two separate patios — with eight units. One would be designated as a ground-floor apartment and the rest would be accessible to the public through a shared party room. The space would be part of the housing division of the city's planning department, Mihevc said, adding that he doesn't know the actual cost to redevelop the site. By the time the building's slated for demolition, developers will also have spent at least a decade trying to interest buyers who wanted to build the home with the original architectural features. "A couple of years ago, we were having an open house — we couldn't find anybody who wanted to buy it," Mihevc said. There's only about 100 sq. ft. of the home that remains standing. Surveying the exterior of the feline-shaped front door showed signs of decay and neglect. The building, which is in the H.R. Boyle Avenue neighbourhood, was constructed in 1965 and had a previous owner who kept it in "very fine condition," said Mihevc. The home was owned by a legal non-profit group, but the lawyer tasked with selling the property went on an extended vacation and the owner moved. “There’s usually not a lot of maintenance, ♦
