A helicopter boom operator may be required to perform tasks such as operating a hoist to lift a mounted boom, working with a boom manipulator to position the boom, or operating a landing skid in order to maintain the boom steady and functional. These tasks are performed by the helicopter boom operator who sits behind and below a mounted helicopter. Various control systems including sensors such as gyroscopes, accelerometers, and optical cameras may be used to sense motions and positions of the mounted boom, the operator and/or the airframe, and convert these to control signals which can be transmitted to the mounted boom, the mounted boom manipulator, or to other control systems. It is possible to control a boom or other device from the cockpit of an aircraft. However, during flight, the aircraft may be subjected to numerous changing forces and other unpredictable operating conditions. It can be challenging for the helicopter boom operator, who is located far below the aircraft, to predict and control a change in the position of the boom and/or the aircraft. Accordingly, the helicopter boom operator may be required to react to unintended actions of the aircraft and take corrective action. FILED NOT FOR PUBLICATION NOV 18 2016 09e8f5149f

I have both a desktop PC, and a laptop. Between them, I have over 40 laptops, and there's a fair amount of content I want to save. I'm not saying this is the best clipboard manager out there, but if you spend a great deal of time copying and pasting text on a computer, it's ideal. Thanks to Text Buttons, I can save my work to the clipboard quickly. When opening this application, it was supposed to be a system tray icon. It's not clear if this is an issue with my particular version or other versions. I copied the location of the application from the website to my desktop. The I go to the folder and it
