It was written in

1722 and was premiered in London in 1725 by Italian-born violinist and composer Giovanni Battista Somis. The symphony has a slow introduction in A major, which serves as an overture. The main part of the symphony, in C minor, begins with a cadenza and a fugue that Vivaldi himself made an integral part of the work. The final part of the work is a fugue that begins on the main theme, and is followed by the second subject in A minor. The original version of this symphony was not published, as was the case with the earlier symphonies and concerti.
