Bad blood between Fort Worth City Hall and the Texas Americano — a historic cigar box made with a unique polymer, adding a colorful twist to its appearance — was on display this week during a special talk by Fort Worth's long-time CEO David M. Bryant. "Here is a community that has a long history of succeeding on its own — nothing is owed to anyone," said Bryant, in a presentation at Victoria Wood Theatre. Fort Worth is best known as the home of Bass Performance Hall. But it also is synonymous with quality. In this case, the city's political establishment and its financial elite are working to achieve a goal that's typical for successful CEOs — a city that never looks like the past. We're the most diverse city in Texas. When we're able to have people from all backgrounds be there and be able to co-exist, that's the best of Fort Worth. — David Bryant "We're trying to do something that's never been done before in Fort Worth," said Bryan Davis, president of the Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce. "We're the most diverse city in Texas. When we're able to have people from all backgrounds be there and be able to co-exist, that's the best of Fort Worth." Davis said Fort Worth has received an award for its public spaces, and "it's the first time anyone has ever given the city that award." Bryant said Fort Worth's uniqueness comes from the diverse makeup of its population. The city is the lone local destination for the famed Texas Live Barns, and Wood Theatre draws a mix of theater and live music. Bryant said the success of the city is dependent on the support of its business community. He argued that Fort Worth needs to continue to attract investment to help businesses expand, as well as keep certain sectors of the economy strong. "The business that's here is critical," he said. Artificial light at night can put residents at risk, according to a recent study by a Texas A&M University group. It studied hazards caused by artificial light at night in Corpus Christi, Houston, Dallas-Fort Worth and other cities. Bryant said as the city continues to grow, it has to develop infrastructure for new residents, including schools, roads and sewer systems. The city has established a policy that no new projects can be built without planned parking, he said. "You can't build a house
