Currently there is limited data on the use of multi-compartmental and multi-dimensional flow imaging in cardiovascular stenting. Two-dimensional phase contrast (2DPC) and multi-compartmental susceptibility-weighted imaging (SWI) were acquired in 15 consecutive patients on the same day. 2DPC and SWI were then compared for the detection of vascular abnormalities. In addition, the extent of bleeding and the need for blood transfusion were recorded. 2DPC imaging failed to identify the stent struts and did not identify all vascular abnormalities. All stent-related abnormalities were identified using SWI (p h i
