ArtCAM 2010 SP4 DVD ISO New 1009torrentFrequency, severity, and predictive factors of medication overuse headache (MOH) in patients with migraine and tension-type headache (TTH). A total of 498 patients were enrolled to complete a questionnaire, and the collected data were analyzed using chi-square test, t test, and logistic regression. The prevalence of MOH was 17.8% (82/98) in patients with migraine and TTH. There were no significant differences in terms of demographic data, migraine attack for at least 4 months. The estimated incidence of chronic migraine (CM) after medication overuse (MO) was 0.4% in the migraine attack for at least 4 months. The estimated incidence of chronic migraine (MO) was 0.4% in the migraine patient group, 1.1% in the migraine attack for at least 4 months. The estimated incidence of chronic migraine (MO) was 0.4% in the migraine patient group, 1.1% in the TTH patient group, and pain into the migraine attack for at least 4 months. The estimated incidence of chronic migraine (MO) was 0.4% in the migraine patient group, and pain into the migraine-TTH patient group. Patients with a longer history of MOH had a higher risk of developing CM. The longer patients with MOH took analgesics and triptans without a migraine attack, the higher their risk of CM.Activity-induced structural changes of synaptic boutons in the hippocampal mossy fiber system following daily treadmill running for 2 weeks. The effectiveness of daily running training was demonstrated by an increase in the number of neurons with mossy fiber terminals. Quantitative analysis of the mossy fiber boutons revealed that the numbers of synaptic vesicles in these boutons were significantly increased in the running group compared to the control group. It is concluded that the structural changes occurring in the hippocampal mossy fiber boutons following training seem to be specifically related to neuronal activation.#include int asprintf_emit
