It looks something like this: public class MyViewModel { public string DisplayName { get; set; } public bool DisplayDescription { get; set; } } The view that I have looks something like this: @model MyViewModel @if (Model.DisplayDescription) { @Html.DisplayFor(m => m.DisplayName) } @Model.DisplayDescription I want to bind this view to my viewModel: @Html.TextBoxFor(m => m.DisplayName) @Html.TextBoxFor(m => m.DisplayDescription) I think I have the bindings right: @model MyViewModel @Html.TextBoxFor(m => m.DisplayName) @Html.TextBoxFor(m => m.DisplayDescription) But then I get the error "Value cannot be null. It is an object of type 'System.String'." What is the best way to do this? A: You need to have a separate model for your view. You could have a ViewModel class that takes your MyViewModel and/or any other info required by the view. That way, the inputs for the view and the model should stay completely separate. Your ViewModel would have properties to bind the view to and properties to set the ViewModel's values. ca3bfb1094
