The effects of once weekly infusion of native low molecular weight heparin on the clinical status and the microangiographic findings in patients with in-stent restenosis. Clinical studies have shown that maintenance low molecular weight heparin (LMWH) therapy has a preventive effect on restenosis after percutaneous transluminal coronary angioplasty (PTCA) in high risk patients. We investigated the clinical course and the effect on restenosis of a once weekly low dose of native LMWH therapy after stenting for in-stent restenosis (ISR). The authors present 24 patients with ISR (diameter > or =2 mm in diameter and > or =30% lumen occlusion) after implantation of PTCA stents with a drug-eluting stent. In 15 patients the treatment of ISR was performed with a first generation drug-eluting stent and in nine patients with a second generation drug-eluting stent. In the remaining 30 patients who served as the control group, the ISR was treated with balloon angioplasty. Afterwards the ISR was treated with a second generation drug-eluting stent (n = 9). All patients were followed for a mean period of 14.5 months. At baseline, the lesion characteristics were similar in the three groups. After stenting and during follow-up, there were no differences between the three groups with regard to restenosis, clinical events, thromboembolic complications and bleeding complications. Compared with the controls, the drug-eluting stent group had a lower rate of stent restenosis (10.0% vs. 55.6%; P =
