An organocatalytic approach to the stereodefined synthesis of α -substituted peroxides is described. The methodology, which involves an enantioselective peroxidative C-N cross-coupling, is enabled by the discovery of two new organocatalysts that are tailored to stereoselectively promote this transformation. Experiments demonstrate that the enantiomeric supramolecular catalysts containing β -carbene moieties bind and stabilize in situ generated radicals and are able to direct alkyl peroxides away from competing alkoxy, Michael, or [3,3]-sigmatropic reactions, thereby enabling the selective generation of α -substituted peroxides. Use of field guns is effective in killing animals, including humans. However, field guns are not applicable for long-range killing. Currently, it is often a problem to exterminate pests for a long distance. On the other hand, traps are effective in exterminating pests for a long distance, but not for killing animals.
