Daily H5N1 Update - May 26, 2009 May 26, 2009 UN agency scores bad on bird flu Thanks to the U.S. Air Force for providing this photo taken by an F-15E Strike Eagle of a fleeing duck in Syria. (AP Photo/USAF) UN scientists have scored America's best recent effort in tracking down bird flu in Syria as "too little, too late." This comes after it was widely reported that the U.S. had tracked down an avian flu outbreak among Iraqi birds in that country. "For the first time, we can say with certainty that we have found H5N1 strains, [and] we can also say that the strains we have found and sequenced are now in the wild," says Erwin Buescher, a senior UN expert on avian flu. But with H5N1 coming back from the dead repeatedly in the past, what's the deal? "I think it's probably still more of a technical achievement than a real-world achievement," says Chris Parish of the British think-tank the Institute for Security Studies, where he's written a report on this year's epizootics of the H5N1 virus. "Unfortunately, the research, if done the way it should be, should give you more information to stop the disease from spreading," says Parish. "But unfortunately,
