Unless you really have interest in the game, this is probably.Q: What is the last number in the series from Mathematics Stack Exchange? Based on this answer, I was wondering whether anyone could list what is the last number associated with each question (or user) of the Mathematics Stack Exchange network? I only checked the front page and it looks like it increases for each question. A: I'm the stats guy at MathOverflow. As mentioned in that answer, there are four rep cap categories, plus your own reputation. The top number in each row is the rep cap for the question/user. So we end up with something like this (with rounded numbers): 26, 2, 3, 1, 6 I don't know the last number in each row, but according to my query it is 26, which was reached in this question: The highest one answers the second highest one? by David Speyer. If no user has reached 26, it will remain at 26 forever, and the row will never be updated. A: There is actually an easier way to do this, as rep_i is a constant for a user, i.e. does not increase per question. So in a query to my database: SELECT MAX(rep), userid FROM posts GROUP BY userid $\text{rep}
