This is a follow-up to my previous game The New Fantasy Action RPG. In general, a user is required to manually input his/her location information by using GPS or location information receiving apparatus, such as a navigation apparatus or a map display apparatus, in order to obtain desired information in portable equipment, a mobile telephone, etc. If a user manually inputs his/her location information, the location information receiving apparatus, such as the navigation apparatus or the map display apparatus, is able to obtain desired information from a server according to the location information. However, when an error occurs in the manually input location information due to a sensing error of the GPS or the location information receiving apparatus, desired information cannot be obtained. Therefore, a user cannot obtain desired information, despite paying an expensive price, in some instances. Therefore, there is a need in the art for

Transcriptional up-regulation of the lipase Lip2 in the haemolymph of the ant Lepidoptera Trichoplusia ni. The lipases Lip1 and Lip2 are chymotrypsin-related serine proteases of Leptinotarsa decemlineata that fulfill a wide range of roles in insect physiology. As a first step in understanding their function, we have investigated the regulation of expression of Lip1 and Lip2 during development. Both genes are expressed in larval stage, with their patterns differing from those of the insects' chymotrypsin Clostridium perfringens lipase, which is constitutively expressed and down-regulated upon pupation, and there is some evidence that Lip2 may be up-regulated during larval development. Whilst the functions of Lip1 and Lip2 in larvae are unknown, there are indications that the expression of Lip2 may be up-regulated as a protective response to infection by microorganisms such as fungi, bacteria and viruses. Here we have investigated the expression of Lip2 in the adult insect, which has a complex immune defence system. Lip2 is constitutively expressed in adult haemolymph and is up-regulated considerably following infection of the insect by bacteria and viruses. By both northern blot analysis and Western blot analysis with specific antiserum, Lip2 is shown to be up-regulated transcriptionally in adult haemolymph of the ant Leptotrombidium-haroldi. Purification and sequence analysis of the N-terminal region indicates that it is indistinguishable from that of the Lip2 homologue from L. decemlineata, but the C-terminal region is divergent and only exhibits homology with the nNOS protein from Drosophila melanogaster and Homo sapiens. An insect nNOS gene has previously been shown to be up-regulated in response to bacterial infection in Manduca sexta, and has been shown to be up-regulated in both larval and adult haemolymph following the removal of the haemocytes. Our results therefore indicate that Lip2 up-regulation is a general response in the innate immune response, occurring in response to a wide range of challenges. Who We
