Serena Williams is ready to make her return to the WTA tournament Serena Williams announced she would play in the main draw of the Aegon Championships this week in London, prompting hope she would return from a hiatus that has lasted for more than three years. On Tuesday, the 34-year-old American said she had made a decision to play in the Aegon Championships in Eastbourne, which starts on Friday. Serena Williams will make her return to professional tennis after a three-year lay-off following her defeat at Wimbledon in 2008. Several months ago, in an interview with the Telegraph, she said she thought about giving up professional tennis, but would be unable to bear the thought of forgetting how to play. "I think deep down, I think it's more than mental. It's a physical thing," she said in November. "I've thought about it. I don't know whether I will." Serena Williams began playing professionally in September 1998 and was regarded as one of the greatest female tennis players of all time. She won seven Grand Slam titles between 1999 and 2002, was the Olympic singles champion in 2008, and the first woman to reach the US$60 million (£37m) in career prize money.
