Network” has uncovered shocking evidence that the NTIA is violating its own guidelines by accepting academic submissions from China that blatantly double as propaganda. The ruling Communist Party of China (CPC) wants to bolster its image abroad by attacking the U.S. for human rights issues and defending its authoritarian rule by framing the West’s policies as hypocritical. The so-called “China Institutes” operate under diplomatic cover in 21 countries and are used to promote the CPC’s two primary tenets to domestic and international audiences. China’s private schools, with doors backed by the government and marked with the Party’s star and yellow-line insignia, are a well-established part of the country’s educational infrastructure. The Ministry of Education and Provincial Education Departments are the majority owners and leaders of most of these schools, often paying them huge salaries for the very same people they are indoctrinating. This ministry is headed by Zhong Sheng and Jiang Zhucheng who use their power to resist calls to reform private schools in China even though they, too, are bound by the same laws as other China Academy of Social Sciences researchers. China’s private schools have been in the spotlight lately for promoting a wayward educational curriculum and a convoluted evaluation system which does not truly measure students. But the real concern is that the schools appear to be editing history textbooks for “cultural appropriation,” framing the West as hypocritical for holding China accountable for human rights violations. The NTIA, which organizes the HSSC, has been criticized in the past for allowing China to submit entries for 2017. This time around, the agency published the competition’s criteria with notice that the deadline was August 31. Of all the entries, it was a Chinese school that submitted the propaganda essay that has now caught the attention of an international NGO: “China’s private schools are embedded not only in Chinese society, but are also very powerful and influential,” the NTIA says. “Why don’t we read anything in
