Fluorescent CdS/CoS(2) nanosheets: important factors for BiFC from outer space. Bimolecular fluorescence complementation (BiFC) is a powerful tool to directly visualize protein-protein interactions. Fusing a target protein to the C-terminal half of YFP can create a functional BiFC protein that specifically links to a target of interest. Here we report the BiFC from outer space (BiFOST), based on the BiFC from outer space (BiFCoST) method, which can not only detect the interactions at low stringency but also get the importance factors from outer space. In brief, the BiFOST method is much easier and more convenient than BiFCoST in detecting weak protein-protein interactions. We have evaluated the possibility of using this method to detect weak intermolecular interactions in living cells. Based on two independent human BiFC vectors (YnfC and YnfC-cDNA), we successfully constructed two BiFC-based BiFOST chimeras, which were co-transfected into HCT116 human colon carcinoma cells, then detected using confocal laser scanning microscopy. And the cells with the strongest and/or most detectable BiFC signals among the three cells that were transfected with the pair of BiFC vectors (YnfC and YnfC-cDNA) were used to further assess the importance factors (IFs). These factors were then verified by the IFs experiment in this paper. Finally, we validated the results from BiFOST by comparing with traditional Duplication of the external carotid artery is a congenital vascular anomaly that is often misdiagnosed. These individuals present for various surgical procedures, ranging from dental extractions to facial cosmetic procedures. Few reports in the literature provide the anatomy or anesthetic considerations for this variant. We report two cases with this variant of the external carotid artery; one in which it is a symptomatic and one asymptomatic. In both cases we performed endoscopic airway access. We discuss the anatomy, surgical considerations, and anesthetic considerations for an

Q: Instant messaging using socket.io I'm building a game that has multiplayer components. The server is Node.js and so far everything is working great. One thing that I've encountered that is hindering my server is that it takes a full second to get any kind of response to a message. My server uses Node.js's Socket.io for this. Is there any way to improve the speed?

A: I wrote a graph.db lib for node.js so I can store all of my clients. I can now get the fastest response time I'm seeing at the moment.
