Although Photoshop is a very powerful image editing tool, it's only one of many image editing programs. In fact, there are so many other free and expensive options available to all photographers that you can use your image editing need in most any program. Understanding Photoshop's Layers and Levels Photoshop has many helpful features to make editing images easier. The most important of them is the Layer editing system. Every image in Photoshop is divided into separate layers, and you work with these layers much as you would put together a jigsaw puzzle. When working on a photo, you create layers for your image and then add, move, resize, delete, or transform the layers to create the finished image. You can use the Levels (Layer) adjustment to transform an image. This adjustment enables you to change the brightness and contrast, lighten or darken shades, and sharpen or soften image detail and edges. Adjusting the Levels is one of the most common things you'll do in Photoshop. Figure 7-1 shows the Layer window in Photoshop. You can see all of your Layers. Figure 7-1: The Layer window contains a reference to each image in your image library. Photos have tones. Tones are the colors of an image. As you become more advanced with the manipulation of images and manage to manipulate them to your satisfaction, you'll notice that what started as a one-tone image turns into a range of tones. This difference becomes more apparent when you open an image in Photoshop and find that the entire image has dark shadows, light highlights, midtones, and so on. You make sure that no single area of the photo is lighter than the others. Instead, you use the Levels adjustment to adjust the brightness and contrast of the image so that the black and white areas are darker than the tones. This change in tonality makes the blacks blacker, whites whiter, and highlights brighter. Adjusting Levels is one of the most common image editing tasks that Photoshop provides. For details on the other tools and options that are available to you, check out Book I, Chapter 3. Mining for Light, Defining Shadows Photos sometimes have shadows. Shadows are the dark areas of a photo that contain tonal detail. When you create a tonal image, you leave the shadows empty, as shown in Figure 7-2. When you take a photo, natural shadows are part of every image. *Figure 7-2

11]. The young boy's MRI results showed mild atrophy in bilateral parietal, temporoparietal and occipital lobe regions. Another potential pathomechanism could be immune system dysregulation as involvement of both cellular and humoral immune response is common in AD. Several studies have shown that the immune system undergoes progressive changes with aging and that this change in the immune system composition may contribute to age-related neurodegenerative diseases, such as AD [12, 13]. In this study, biomarkers of inflammation such as cytokines and lymphocyte subsets were also quantified. Samples from T1 and T2 showed increased concentrations of the pro-inflammatory cytokines, IL1- β (mean/median = 40/26 pg/mL), IL-6 (mean/median = 34/16 pg/mL), IL-8 (mean/median = 107/66 pg/mL), and TNF- α (mean/median = 93/50 pg/mL) in both the plasma and serum, but not when comparing T1 and T2. In the literature, elevated cytokine and chemokine levels were observed in AD patients [14, 15]. In our study, we did not examine age-matched healthy controls, but there was a direct relation between age and increased concentrations of IL1- β and IL-6 in T1. In the previous study [16], elevated levels of IL1- β and IL-6 were observed in children with AD. IL-1, IL-6, and TNF- α levels were elevated in AD patients and correlated with disease severity, with the least increase in IL-1 observed in older individuals [17]. The relation between increased T-cell concentrations and AD has not been sufficiently investigated and results are conflicting. In our study, no differences were found in T and B-cell lymphocytes between AD patients and healthy controls. In a previous study in children with AD, we have shown increased numbers of CD4⁺ and CD8⁺ T-cells in cerebrospinal fluid [12]. However, in the current study, no significant differences in T-cell subsets between patients and controls were observed. In
