The present invention generally relates to a head assembly for a magnetic storage device, and in particular relates to a canted core write head with enhanced x-axis return loss for increased media-head interaction. Magnetic storage devices such as disk drives store data by holding a magnetic field modulated with information on a magnetic storage media disk (“disk” or “media disk”), such as a magneto-optical or a digital disk. The data is read back from the disk by reverse operating the read head to write the data to the disk and/or follow the stored magnetic fields with the read head. A typical disk drive includes a magnetic media disk rotated by a spindle motor, and a magnetic head(s) supported by a slider that typically includes an electrical transducer such as a read/write element. The slider is supported by a suspension that includes a load beam and a gimbal. The gimbal is positioned adjacent to the load beam for rotating the slider and suspension. As the disk rotates, an air flow generated by the rotation of the disk causes an air bearing surface (ABS) of the slider to generate a positive pressure which causes the slider to lift and fly on the air bearing generated by the rotating disk. Data signals are transferred between the magnetic head and the magnetic storage media by writing data to the magnetic media and reading data from the magnetic media with the magnetic head. In a typical disk drive, a write head of the magnetic head is formed on a slider that is part of a suspension assembly that includes the load beam, gimbal and flexure. The slider is part of a slider-gimbal-flexure-load-beam assembly mounted to an actuator arm of the disk drive. The load beam includes a dimple to allow contact and non-contact load and unload of the suspension to the disk. Current designs of magnetic suspension assemblies typically use dimples to provide a predetermined load force on the flexure. FIG. 1
