North Korea has condemned a US launch of 59 Tomahawk missiles at Syria, calling it a nuclear "provocation". US Vice President Mike Pence said the missiles were fired from the eastern Mediterranean to simulate attacks on areas near Syria's capital, Damascus, and on a Syrian air base. The US military said none of its missiles hit their targets. The armed forces in North Korea released a statement saying the missile and nuclear tests were carried out to "further bolster" the military's nuclear deterrent. "The nuclear weapons and tools of the (US) imperialists are a real and imminent threat to the lives of our people," the statement said. "We will make nuclear weapons and cutting-edge military technology the source of power of our people's national defence." North Korea's KCNA state news agency said the test involved "military satellites", a reference to a ballistic missile test last month. The test site was on a marine unit of North Korea's eastern seaboard, the report said. What you need to know about the latest missile test North Korea said the test was aimed at verifying the reliability of a new ballistic missile, adding that it would further bolster its nuclear deterrent and support "the establishment of peace in the Korean Peninsula and in the region". The test comes days after Mr Pence said any threats or provocations from the North would be met with a "massive military response". Mr Pence was also criticised for saying there was no love lost between him and North Korean leader Kim Jong-Un during a recent visit to South Korea. But South Korean President Moon Jae-In spoke on Sunday of ongoing efforts to resolve issues that remain between the two Koreas, saying there were "ways to bring peace and not war". North Korea test-fired two short-range projectiles on Sunday, its fourth such launch in a few weeks, South Korea's military said. US Republican Senator Lindsey Graham criticised Mr Pence and Mr Trump for their remarks. "When you stand on the stage and when you talk about the threat of North Korea, you've got to be careful about the words you use," he told CNN. "They are the words that will lead us into a war." Graham said he

La storia del latte fresco estrae un parallelo scomodo con quello del rapporto tra politica e occultismo, tema che è sottile ma affascinante. Dietro le barricate della casa del latte si cela qualcosa che rischia di diventare il giorno successivo una spia nella trama della politica. E a denunciare questa situazione sia l'Associazione Fonario, che ha cercato di spezzare l'alluvione, sia il blogger Enzo Balbi. L'esito delle indagini era noto fin dal 16 gennaio. A dirigere tutto l'operato della Fonario è Andrea La Font, appassionato informatore di poco superiore all'hacker, con molti anni su cronache nazionali e internazionali. Dopo la morte di un ragazzo appena nato, un post su Facebook e quattro mail in tutta Italia, la Fonario aveva avviato
