trends in neonatal care and outcomes in women admitted with a severe intrauterine insult: a population-based analysis. To determine changes in the overall neonatal care and outcomes of infants born to women with severe intrauterine insults over time in the US population, and to identify conditions associated with increased risk of morbidity and mortality. Using the Infant Mortality and Morbidity Database, we conducted a retrospective cohort study of admissions of newborn infants in the US from 2000 to 2004 to US hospitals with delivery capabilities for neonatal intensive care. The population included live births to US women and newborns of less than 7 days of age. A total of 3,523,612 live births were reported. The total population consisted of 54.7% white, 25.9% black, and 20.4% other race. Using multivariate logistic regression, we determined that conditions that contributed to 60% or more of the deaths and the top three conditions that contributed to death were: perinatal asphyxia (48.4%), sepsis (11.9%), and respiratory distress syndrome (8.9%). When adjusting for confounders, gestational age less than 24 weeks (OR, 1.67; 95% CI, 1.59, 1.74), small for gestational age (OR, 1.52; 95% CI, 1.42, 1.63), and being black (OR, 1.33; 95% CI, 1.20, 1.48) were associated with increased risk of death. In children with
