Generally, the aim of a rolling bearing is to optimize rolling elements or balls to ensure a constant, preferably an optimum, rolling circle. In many bearings, the rolling elements are present in rows between two bearing rings. The shaft to be supported by the bearing usually extends through the bearing and is held in the bearing in that the shaft surrounds the bearing rings. Furthermore, seals are provided in contact with the bearing rings to avoid losses in grease. One known solution for the sealing of bearings is shown in WO 2012/096078 A1 (corresponds to U.S. Pat. No. 8,335,414 B1). The bearing is equipped with at least one seal ring between a first bearing ring and a second bearing ring which has rolling elements therein. The seal ring is supported by an inner ring of the bearing. In this way, a bearing ring can be fastened to the shaft of the bearing without a separate bearing ring being mounted. The seal ring is arranged below the bearing ring. At least one seal is provided radially adjacent the bearing ring. The bearing ring is thus held between the inner ring and the seal ring in order to achieve a rotary seal. Bearings according to DE 10 2005 032 303 A1 are equipped with a seal ring arranged between two bearing rings. In the case of a first bearing ring, the seal ring is inserted into the bearing ring and is axially fastened in the bearing. For the second bearing ring, the seal ring has a circumferential groove into which a fastening element is inserted. A holding element is inserted into the seal ring. The holding element acts as a snap-fit element and is located in an inner bearing ring. Also known are so-called "indirectly rolling support
