As noted earlier, the menu options for that May 24 gig have been posted up on Venue Nightclub's Facebook page. Reckless Kelly, the '70s-influenced Tex-Mex hybrid that booked Neil Young for halftime last year, will host R&B/hip-hop duo B.o.B. and producer DJ Mustard, who has remixed for Beyoncé and Rihanna, on Sept. 2. Indie rockers Bad Suns will close out the event. The menu will feature a $7.99 combo that includes a glass of wine, a cocktail and a beer, with the $9.99 option adding a bottle of beer to the bill. An elevated drink menu and food menu will also be available. The food menu, which is yet to be posted online, will include nachos and a Mexican taco. There will also be a "special guest chef" helping out with the food duties. All of these menu options will be on sale at the door, as they are at most shows. In late March, Tootsie's restaurant announced that it was cutting ties with Young and his management, citing Young's "poor performance as an artist" over the past few years. Young responded by saying he would have no comment, though he later said he would perform at the anniversary celebration. Young recently played his last show in the Fort Worth suburb of Odessa in April. The following month, he canceled his remaining shows, including his performance at the now-canceled Freaks Festival. On May 3, Young said on Twitter that he had played his last show. The show was to be his first since he canceled all his remaining tours last year. Young, who was suffering from kidney problems, canceled the last remaining shows on his "Journey Through the Past" tour in the spring, blaming his doctor for misreading the results of a blood test. The present invention relates generally to management of computer systems. In a large computer system, a component of the system may be subject to failure, for example a processor or a memory. Failing components are replaced or repaired and it is important to identify the reason that a component has failed. To this end, the computer system may be configured so that one or more components are tested periodically so that an early warning of impending failure can be obtained. It is known for computer systems to include test modules (e.g. ROM modules) which can be inserted

. But before it takes these down...here's a thought: people have been complaining about the VBlanks. They can be disabled, then they can't be disabled! They're a bug! Composite overscan/dead pixels/etc! So fix those! And they can be disabled! The Intel chip? Let it be! Seriously, what's the point? Ok. I'm done! Now to reboot my notebook again! :D I'll let you know what I think. Hopefully it'll be finished, for the most part. :D So, I was looking for a good place to build a PC. I was thinking of building a large PC with a SSD or Solid State Drive, and a spinning HDD. A decent GPU in the form of ATI Radeon HD 4650 or Intel GMA 4500 HD graphics card. Then I came across a quote from the great Jeff Goldblum in Jurassic Park: "You're absolutely right." And that quote gave me the idea to build a PC that would be the exact opposite of all the machines we've ever seen in our lives. It will be the largest PC in the world, and the slowest. A PC that's the size of a small building, and the speed of a snail. How? Here's the plan. Subwoofers Normally, I like a nice subwoofer. When you hear a nice subwoofer, you know you're going to have a nice sound experience. The only issue is that they're usually a lot of hassle to install, and usually cost more than they're worth. So I'll build one that's under the desk in a place that'll never be seen! Googles Along with our smartphones, we go to googles on a daily basis. We use google docs, google translate, google mail, etc. Google is a powerhouse of a company. So I'm going to use their servers to power my entire internet connection. The Media We used to buy media from CD's, DVDs, etc. Nowadays, we buy it from the great big servers we're connecting to through our computers. I'm just going to use my connection to the planet's fastest servers to store all the media that I want. The Power We use electricity to power our computers, phones, chargers, etc.
