The Hacker News Effect - rohitmehta ====== atgm I didn't really "get" the "Hacker" part of the title until I read the entire article. ~~~ rohitmehta Granted. But even then I didn't really "get" the HN part either. For me, this is a very personal thing. Low pulse pressure is associated with low small artery elasticity in a group of overweight/obese postmenopausal women. Central (aortic) pulse pressure (PP) is a marker of endothelial dysfunction, and increased PP is associated with future cardiovascular events and mortality. It is not known whether PP is associated with microvascular or small artery structure. We examined associations between PP and vascular structure, i.e. aortic pulse wave velocity (PWV) and carotid β-stiffness, in a group of overweight/obese postmenopausal women. One hundred and thirty-four women were recruited from a secondary care center. They were free of cardiovascular disease, diabetes, smoking or antihypertensive medication. Aortic and carotid PP, PWV and carotid β-stiffness were measured with applanation tonometry and ultrasound. A homeostasis model assessment index was calculated as an indicator for insulin resistance. Multiple regression was used to model associations of PP and vascular parameters. High pulse pressure (PP=95th percentile) was associated with increased aortic PWV (mean difference 5.42 m/s, 95% CI 1.99, 9.85, $p=0.003$) and decreased carotid β-stiffness (mean difference -1.04 m/s/kPa, 95% CI -1.85, -0.23, $p=0.01$), independent of age, body mass index, waist circumference, height, heart rate, homeostasis model assessment index, systolic and diastolic blood pressure. Multiple regression adjusted for age, body mass index, waist circumference, height, heart rate, homeostasis model assessment index, systolic and diastolic blood pressure, the negative associations between PP and carotid β-stiffness were attenuated ($p=0.11$ for aortic PWV; $p=0.08$ for carot

The U.S. Army's War on Toys The ad agency Saatchi & Saatchi created this ad for a children's toys store in D.C. featuring an American flag. The biggest corporate tax cut in history, along with the Republican-led War on Workers and a still mysterious War on Women, is aimed squarely at the U.S. military. The U.S. military is the largest employer in the U.S., and as the Topeka Capital-Journal reported, the U.S. military only had 117,000 employees at the end of 2013, the lowest number since 1948, with only about half that many full-time workers.1 The military is slashing its budget by over $300 billion over ten years, yet the U.S. military now spends more than $1.2 trillion each year.2 According to the National Priorities Project, military spending in 2012 exceeded one-fourth of total U.S. federal government expenditures. That's on top of a budget deficit of $1.3 trillion.3 As a result, military cuts have forced the Pentagon to lay off workers. In the first two months of 2014, the Obama administration announced more than 13,000 layoffs because of federal budget cuts, to include 41 military bases in the U.S. and around the world.4 In the "war on women" department, the U.S. military recently announced it would allow transgender soldiers to serve.5 One view of the transgender policy is that it was needed to attract and retain transgender people in the military. Transgender people typically identify as the gender opposite to the one they were assigned at birth, for example, a trans-woman identifies as a man and would typically take hormones to change their body. Yet the Pentagon has already been down this road before, when it tried and failed to allow homosexuals to serve in the military. In 2011, the Obama administration tried to pressure military members in the "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" policy into serving in the military and claimed it wasn't damaging morale. It was, according to an extensive analysis and survey of military personnel by the Center of Military History at the U.S. Army War College.6 It not only had damaging effects on military morale, but also cost the U.S. military millions of dollars. In addition to its budget cuts, the U.S.
