PSX 2010 News Hideo Kojima's Silent Hill Series Gets More of Kojima After teasing a handful of Silent Hill teasers at E3, Konami finally confirmed a new Silent Hill game is in development. Silent Hill Downpour was co-developed by Japanese studio Grasshopper Manufacture and French design studio Grasshopper. Appropriately, it's the second game in the modern Silent Hill series after the 2006 Silent Hill: Shattered Memories. Konami held a press conference for the game in Tokyo today. The official details for the game are scant. No mention of a release date was revealed, no demos were played and the only official gameplay demonstration was on a Wii, which is not exactly friendly to Silent Hill. Still, Konami is hoping that the game will do well enough to keep the franchise alive. It may have already failed, though. Shattered Memories sold fewer than 10,000 units in North America, a critical failure for the game. Fans may be unsure as to whether this new game will live up to the high expectations they've set for it. The latest iteration of
