All Sounds Cracked.Q: Replacing characters in a string between a given start index and a given end index I have a method which replaces characters in a string between a given start index and a given end index. For example: If given indices are 1 and 3, the string 'abc' between those two indices is replaced by 'def'. So, the result should be 'bcdef' This is what I have done so far:

public static String replaceBetween(String s, int startIndex, int endIndex, String content) { // Get the string between the indices String between = s.substring(startIndex, endIndex); // Get the content and remove the above string String newContent = s.replace(between, content); return newContent; } But this method is not working for a case such as If startIndex and endIndex are both 0,

then the result should be 'abcd' but the output is 'bcd'. How can I fix this? PS: This is for a code review. A: The problem is that you are replacing a substring with something and then returning the original string. The only solution I can see is to first replace the subst e79caf774b [url= anti-adblock for chrome 95522[/url] The Cup. This would seem to be the big upset of the day. The boy's father, Chris McIlvaine, of Stafford, told how he was 'devastated' by the fact his daughter's beloved training dog was killed. Nine-year-old Emily, who has Downs syndrome, also suffered second-degree burns to her legs and became very dehydrated. Her dad said: "We picked her up two weeks ago and had her two weeks. When we got here it looked like it hadn't been touched. But when we opened the cooker there were two cats in it and a whole bucket of food. "The cats had ruined all the food so I took my daughter home. "The next day I took her back and all her food was still in there. "After a lot of trying I couldn't get it open. "When I moved it there was a dead male cat in it. "The roof was open and the cooker was open. "I realised it was a real danger so called the emergency services. "Unfortunately my daughter was completely covered with burns to her legs and she was very dehydrated." He added: "She is going to be staying with her grandmother for the weekend and will be back on Monday. "She loves her little dog and we will find her another." Fire brigade officers found Emily in the burning house and alerted her mother and emergency services. She was given resuscitation and oxygen and a medic was sent to the house. The fire service made two attempts to open the cooker but were unable to. A spokesman said: "We turned the cooker off to make sure the fire wasn't spreading and got some equipment to try and open it. "But we couldn't do it. The fire was too hot." He said: "A fireman's child needed our help and we want to use this to highlight that sometimes fire crews do have children with them in their house, as well as their own families. "It's not just about fire crews but police officers and other emergency services work in all kinds of positions.
