Indexing You're already in a digital world, and the sooner you get the hang of using it, the quicker you'll reach your destination. Fortunately, getting the hang of digital basics such as file management and saving isn't complicated. Most of your images start in your computer's _hard drive_ — the computer's internal drive — and end up in another place that's even more important for you to be familiar with: the _digital darkroom_, where you store, organize, and work with your images, such as arranging them on a CD or DVD. A few types of data can help you get the most out of the darkroom, and they're the key to getting to know your computer.

The invention relates to a device for setting the delivery or delivery pressure of hydraulic circuits used in vehicle brakes and especially so-called brake systems with brake pressure boosting. Brake systems are known in which in order to increase the effectiveness of the braking of the individual wheel brakes of a vehicle, additional brake fluid is metered into the brake chambers of the wheel brakes from a reservoir, particularly the master brake cylinder, via the brake circuit. Such brake systems are referred to as brake boosting systems. The brake circuit in this case has a so-called boost pressure chamber and a boost pressure chamber connected to a feed line. The brake circuit includes a master brake cylinder and a brake booster comprising two pressurized chambers connected to one another via a pressure limiting valve. One pressurized chamber is acted upon by a spring force and a second pressurized chamber is acted upon by a constant or variable operating pressure. The brake circuit further includes a pressure-return valve (piston) in the boost pressure chamber. The pressure-return valve is a throttled valve which increases the rest power of the boosting effect and enables it to be varied as a function of the brake pedal actuation force. A brake pressure boosting device of the above type, which comprises a master brake cylinder (MB), a brake booster (BV) and an electronics module is described in WO 2007/006935 A2. This known brake system comprises a brake booster, in which a valve chamber is formed which is separated by a partition wall from a pressure-return chamber. The latter is subdivided into a lower pressure-return chamber and a higher pressure-return chamber via which the master brake cylinder MB can be fed with brake fluid. A supply line leads to the pressure-return chamber of the master brake cylinder MB, in which line a maximum pressure can be maintained by means of a closing pressure limiting valve P2. The supply line is also connected to a pressure reducing valve P3 which is connected to a line which leads to the booster chamber BV1 of the brake booster. The pressure reducing valve P3 has a pilot line which leads to a control valve C1. The control valve C1 is connected via a throttle (thrust) line, which includes a throttle valve V, to the inlet pressure chamber P1 of the master brake cylinder MB. At the booster chamber BV1 of the brake booster, the supply line is divided into a high pressure segment (high pressure line) and a low pressure segment (low pressure line). An outlet line of the brake
