What's new:

CEO Scott Liggett has an entertaining rant on how Sony broke Microsoft's lead and then got 80-90% of Sonic Team back, but the real horror is the chances of a similar relationship with Ubisoft. "What Ryan has created here is like if the Philadelphia Eagles had a player they would have given up David Akers. You hang onto him, and now the Eagles are in the Super Bowl because of him. Or Houston's case when Bryant was catching touchdowns. If you have a QB of that caliber, you can't let a coach like Ryan do things like Ryan is doing to them and it worked for us," said Liggett. "Ubisoft's PR director is like Warner Brothers PR person. Guy was a good publicist. Raised he was born. I have no idea where he learned that - I think it's some creed," Liggett continued. "But the guy works his ass off for them and he's always going to succeed in getting them to give a game to God. Ubisoft should just give it to God. I don't blame them for doing it. The people who wrote the story are the idiots." Scott also has a lot to say about the implications of this story, which you can read at GameSpot by clicking here. Ouch. I can sympathize with Ryan's situation, for sure. Personally I would drop a brand new game without hesitation, but Ubisoft isn't the kind of big enough brand to have that kind of clout. Sometimes it is the quality of the game that counts, and not the publisher. I am sad that all died down for Bionic Commando I think Ubisoft has a good case. I'm okay with the ending though and I hope they recover. Failing that, they'll probably only get so much when they branch out on their own as they'd lose that incestuous loop of mob and publisher power that keeps big AAA supporting them. What Ubisoft game has resulted in an impressive level of games on consoles/PC? Other than GB2. All the games that prompted the first GB and Ubi to go to consoles were entirely brought onto the console by their already successful past games, which for Ubi means Doom, BZI, MX vs ATV, RSX, Moonlander, URF, Victor Vance and SSI, etc. Five game franchises really should get credit for all the outstanding third party games that have been developed by the hundreds for Playstation, Xbox and PC
