after a restart I still can't upload new files with canvas. It seems the old data in the image that is not saved, is not updated correctly. I checked all the settings so far, there are no such settings that can save the old data to a new file. I'm using Photoshop CS6 Version 12.0.4 How to reset all the old settings to the default? A: If you are using Photoshop CS6, The process is very easy. Open the file in Photoshop, press cmd + c, click edit and choose normalize. Then apply the normalization which will keep your image same as before it's edited. Q: Difference between Image, Bitmap and Texture We have a physics engine that can make a lot of use of images. We have a library of pre-rendered images for various materials, textures, and for whatever else we can need. We do not have a specific image loading, especially since we use a lot of images a lot. As the questions may suggest, what are the differences between image, bitmap and texture, specifically in terms of the image loading and rendering? A: A texture is simply a piece of data that has a particular format that has to be queried from it. A bitmap is basically just a grid of pixels. You can use it for rendering individual pixels, or for rendering large blocks of a given material. If you set the blocks to a uniform color, then you can just use them as an opaque background and draw them that way. A texture (as used by GL) is similar, except that it is based on a 2D texture. You have to use a texture as an OpenGL texture. They're just a bit of memory with pixels in them. A bitmap or a texture can be created using a number of different ways, and is specified as a number of bytes. As such, you can use something like `glTexSubImage2D` to load in a texture, and `glDrawPixels` to load in a bitmap. # Tests for PERFORMANCE_SCHEMA --source include/not_embedded.inc --source include/have_perfschema.inc --source ../include/start_server_common.inc #
