Tone2 Electrax Full .Q: Converting a model into a TypeScript class I am working on an application in Typescript, and I have started refactoring from my AngularJS model (a resource that I have defined in a factory) into a TypeScript class. I started from my json data on the server side, and added a couple of references to a couple of functions from my factory. I made my custom functions as private members of my class, as well as the private members of my factory. My question is how can I get a reference to my AngularJS model, so I can call it from within my class. I have tried to initialize it as a class property but the compiler complains that I am not initializing it. Do I have to explicitly define it as a member in my TypeScript class or do I have to go a different route? Class

class MyModel { private subscriptionId: string private accessToken: string public constructor( public payload: MyPayload, public policyKey: MyPolicyKey ) { this.subscriptionId = payload.subscriptionId this.accessToken = payload.accessToken } } Factory export class MyFactory { private static instance: MyModel public static getInstance(): MyModel { return MyFactory.instance } private constructor() { MyFactory.instance = new MyModel(MyPayload.myPayload, MyPolicyKey.myPolicyKey) } public getSubscriptionId(): string { return MyFactory.instance.subscriptionId } public getAccessToken(): string { return MyFactory.instance.accessToken } } A: Use MyFactory.instance as class property and initialize it in constructor: class MyModel { private subscriptionId: string private accessToken: string public constructor( public payload: MyPayload, public policyKey: MyPolicyKey ) { this.subscriptionId = payload.e79caf774b
