Recovery of cerebral metabolic rate of oxygen from transient ischemia in the rat. After 2 hours of reversible forebrain ischemia in the rat, the recovery of the cerebral metabolic rate of oxygen was studied with [1-14C]glucose during reperfusion. During the first hour of reperfusion no changes were observed in the cerebral metabolic rate of oxygen, cerebral blood flow and the level of glucose. During the first hour of reperfusion the cerebral metabolic rate of oxygen increased to about 50% of preischemic values in the ischemic core and in the hippocampus, and to 80% in the striatum. At the end of the first hour of reperfusion a steady state was achieved in all structures tested. From the second hour to the end of reperfusion the cerebral metabolic rate of oxygen increased more than the cerebral blood flow (flow recovery) in the hippocampus, cortex, striatum and thalamus. No changes in the metabolic rate of oxygen were observed in the cerebellum throughout the entire reperfusion. The flow recovery was close to zero in the ischemic core and the striatum, whereas it was large in the hippocampus and the cortex. During recovery after transient ischemia in the rat the flow recovery exceeded the recovery of the cerebral metabolic rate of oxygen in all the structures tested.Q: As 1cdb36666d

Jailbreak Iphone, iPad, iPod touch and MacBookThis week, President Obama addressed the nation about his plans for reigning in the Federal Reserve and, more broadly, the economy. And in doing so, the president barely mentioned the health reform law or the Affordable Care Act that Republicans have been trying their best to kill. "Unfortunately, there are some who still don't believe in America, who still don't believe that this country is exceptional, who still think that America is just another broken country, our home is just another garrison state, our economy is just another command economy," Obama told the nation from the Oval Office. "They don't recognize what makes America — including my administration — different. I do. And that is we are a nation that values freedom, we are a nation that values free enterprise, we're a nation that believes in the fundamental and enduring truth that no matter what we look like or where we come from or where we are from, we can make it here if we try." The president rarely mentions the ACA by name in his speeches. The law's few mentions have been in the context of health reform generally or health care reform generally. And yet he did, more than once, and also the substance of the law. Just a few days ago, during a speech in Las Vegas, Obama said that "If you like your health care plan, you can keep your health care plan. If you like your doctor, you can keep your doctor. If you like your health insurance company, you don't have to worry, they're staying in business." Obama also repeatedly referred to the Affordable Care Act as "my signature domestic achievement." And while Obama does make regular references to the health reform law, it's unusual to only mention it once. Republican lawmakers have said for years that the health reform law should not be mentioned as a part of the whole economy, since it's only a small
