The Saudi ambassador to Washington, King Salman bin Abdulaziz, on Friday defended his government's killing of journalist Jamal Khashoggi, saying it was "an act of aggression against Saudi Arabia," according to Axios. "We know that journalist Jamal Khashoggi was a victim of an unacceptable crime," – King Salman of Saudi Arabia

Appearing on CNN's State of the Union, Ambassador Khalid bin Salman said the killing of the Washington Post writer was an act of aggression against Saudi Arabia and that his government was weighing its options. The royal's remarks came after President Trump said he did not believe the CIA's assessment that Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman ordered the killing. "I have no idea," he said when asked if he believed the prince ordered the killing. "I'm not really concerned about it. It's a very vicious world out there and now you see what's going on. And somebody would kill him if they thought there was an excuse to." The president said that he believes Khashoggi's fiancée "is not guilty of anything" in regards to the murder. "She's spending the rest of her life in jail," Trump said. The president was interrupted by a question about a report from The Washington Post that the CIA believes Khashoggi was killed in a Saudi consulate in Turkey. "I don't really know. Nobody knows. Nobody really knows," Trump said. "Here's the bottom line — she's not guilty of anything. She's been cleared on that. She was tortured, horribly tortured as you read — and that whole thing is a very terrible thing." The president said the Saudi royals "have been a wonderful ally" in the fight against radical Islamic terror. "That's the way I feel. I have to feel a certain way," Trump said. "This is a horrible thing. And he should be brought to justice. And we're looking at that very seriously." – President Trump

The President of Turkey President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan directly implicated Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman as being responsible for the murder. Erdogan, speaking to reporters after
