Electrochemical performance of carbon-tungsten/carbon composite electrode modified with cobalt-nickel-phosphorous for the study of trace metals in the human body. Tungsten-nickel-carbon composite electrode (WC/Ni/C) was prepared by electrodeposition and was characterized by cyclic voltammetry, electrochemical impedance spectroscopy (EIS), SEM and TEM. The WC/Ni/C-modified glassy carbon electrode (GCE) was used for the determination of trace metals in the human serum. Under optimal conditions, the WC/Ni/C-modified GCE yielded a linear calibration curve in the range of 0.0-14.5 microg mL<sup>-1</sup> for Co(II), 0.0-13.0 microg mL<sup>-1</sup> for Ni(II), and 0.0-9.5 microg mL<sup>-1</sup> for Pb(II) with detection limit of Co(II) was 0.25, Ni(II) was 0.26 and Pb(II) was 0.23 microg mL<sup>-1</sup>. The relative standard deviation (R.S.D.) for the recovery of Co(II), Ni(II) and Pb(II) was 5.6%, 4.9% and 3.3%, respectively. The linear regression coefficients of the three analytes were higher than 0.995. The average recoveries for the spiked samples of Co(II), Ni(II) and Pb(II) were between 95% and 105%. The proposed method was used to determine trace metals in the human serum. The results were compared with that of AAS, the recoveries were in the range of 93-108%. The electrode was stable within the time of its use.[Bromouracil in the treatment of breast cancer in postmenopausal women. A clinical study]. One hundred and eleven patients with primary breast cancer in menopause received either an immediate or a delayed vincristin-cycopham (VCR-CY) chemotherapy and different hormonal (HRT, treatment with tamoxifen only or combined with oophorectomy, or ovariectomy) adjuvant therapies. VCR-CY (1.5 mg/m<sup>2</sup>/day) was administered 3 times every 2 weeks and CYC (400 mg/m<sup>2</sup>) once every 4 weeks as a combined regimen. An overall remission rate of 67%

More than half of US tech firms suffer a data breach at least once a year, according to a new survey, underscoring the continuing prevalence of security incidents in the industry. Virtually all survey respondents who use cloud applications (93 percent) face security challenges because the attack surface is so broad, according to the IT security firm Bromium Inc., whose annual Security and Trust Report on Tuesday provides a snapshot of the current state of security in the tech industry. Cloud security itself is seen as the biggest risk by survey respondents. Last year, an online survey commissioned by Bromium found that 96 percent of IT professionals consider security as one of their company's top risks. Additionally, the top three most worrisome industry trends cited in the survey were compromised accounts (75 percent), breaches of unsecured cloud services (69 percent) and sensitive or high-value data leaks (68 percent). "We've seen a big increase in the number of industries that can suffer data leaks. That's a big shift," said Sean McGurnaghan, CTO at Bromium. More than half the respondents (54 percent) have been subject to at least one data breach in their organizations. More than half (57 percent) of the data breaches over the past five years have been caused by a high-risk vendor or a customer, up from 42 percent in the previous survey. The remaining breaches have been largely attributed to employees. Threats from insiders have diminished since last year. The number of insider threat incidents has declined over the past two years, dropping to 38 percent of incidents in 2016 from more than half (55 percent) in 2013. Meanwhile, the number of high-risk vendors — meaning both rogue hackers and criminals — has remained relatively stable, according to the survey. Meanwhile, the incidence of targeted ransomware attacks has spiked. Bromium expects that the number of ransomware events could rise 15 percent next year, with 40 percent of ransomware incidents occurring in the second quarter of 2017. "We are seeing a lot more attacks that are tied to, or are directly tied to, nation-state actors," McGurnaghan said. "It is not just targeting of individuals or individuals' systems. It's larger attacks on infrastructure." The most common way of accessing network data has been through lateral movement on the corporate network, according to the survey. The data-breach incidents that go undetected are
