HA Harrison â AVA De-Esser v1.0.1. AVA De-Esser v1.0.1. Team R2R ☐ June 21 2011 - 1.0 - 1.0.1. Has anyone ever taught a small child the true meaning of Christmas? The cheap, drugstore, Barbie dolls, over-priced underwear, and cheesy gift-store found only in malls are all terrible taste. At least, that's what I tell my 7-year-old niece, Chloe, who will be 9 in a few weeks. But I'm no expert on all things Christmas. So, I called up Olivia Rich, author of the book Is There a Santa Claus?: A Maternal Quest.

Olivia told me about "the First Presents" theory, which suggests that as we grow up, we're encouraged to buy things for others — rather than the reverse. (In other words, the Santa myth comes from us.) Even though I don't believe that Santa is real, the gift-giving mindset can be deeply ingrained. We're told to give specific presents to our children, friends, and, in our own quiet way, beloved pets as well. Then there's Santa's wife, Mrs. Claus, who, well, for some reason, never seems to hang up the damn phone. For starters, Olivia urges you to do four things: 1. Go the extra mile with your child. Olivia explains: "Your kids want to know that you're thinking about them when you buy a gift, but maybe it's not good enough to just send a gift card and then send a separate gift. So be creative and think about how you can create a real experience for your kids." Instead of having to pick from something that has already been purchased — like a 24-pack of cheese crackers from the local supermarket — choose something that is unique. This can be as easy as choosing your child's favorite book or recording a personalized video. 2. Make the gift fun. If you want your
