Q: Is it OK to lie and cheat to give help, even if the lied and cheated is horrible? My friend's boyfriend is in a very bad situation, not only financially but also he has a drug problem. This is our first time to see one this person, since we moved to a big city a year ago, and although he is not a bad person, this situation forces us to feel pity and to want to help him, even if we know it will be a very hard job. And so the question is, is it OK to lie and to cheat to help him? We already talked to him about his situation and he told us about one of his 'bases'. We know that's not the real reason for his situation but he also told us that he never liked the fake way he was acting, the way he was forced to fake (mostly because his drug problem was getting worse and worse and he was always in danger of losing his job), so he tried to hide his 'partner' who made him do this. As a consequence, his friend had to suddenly become the one who went to the drug dealer in order to buy the drugs for him, in order to 'respect' him as an old friend. I know what I want to tell him about it, but what I am worried about is if he will take it well. I don't think I will get any reward from him for all the hard work I have made but I believe that a solution is more important than money and that will make him happy, in the end. I think I need to tell him the truth but I am not sure that I can. I know I can't tell him the whole truth because it will make him more upset, I mean it is very hard to say that a friend you talked to like a brother has been cheating him for a year without any explanation. Maybe it would be better for him to know the truth, but I am afraid of him not taking
