Part 2.Implantable medical devices (IMDs) are generally utilized to deliver electrical stimulation therapy to the heart of a patient via leads that are implanted in the heart. The IMD may, by way of example, provide a pacing rhythm that resembles a physiological pacing rhythm of the heart. Such an IMD may monitor the heart rate via the implanted leads. A monitor of the heart rate may provide a warning to a patient of atrial fibrillation (AF) or other high heart rate conditions. Some IMDs may operate in conjunction with a medical device to form a biventricular therapy. The medical device may deliver stimulation therapy to the patient's heart in order to, for example, treat bradycardia (slow heart rate) or other heart conditions. There may be circumstances wherein a medical device, such as an IMD, may operate in conjunction with a medical component in the heart in order to provide therapy to the heart. There may be various medical components associated with various therapies that have been proposed.[Usefulness of the respirator: complaints about the respirator in the nursing home]. Patients in nursing homes often have respiratory problems. Different kinds of respirators are used. Some patients do not tolerate the respirator but improve under treatment. Many respir 6d1f23a050
