I have a small app that needs to get the value of a system variable (e.g. PATH). With the exe file running I can output the value using system::system('echo %PATH%') and it shows the value of the variable. I am now trying to do this with NSIS and need to get the value of ${NSIS_CONFIG_SYSTEM_VARIABLES}::system::system and it shows $0. However I need to get the actual value of the variable. Can anyone tell me the proper way of doing that? A: get system variable NSIS has a class "System" which contains more functions for dealing with this. system Get system configuration and return system value. Q: Ubuntu 14.04 cannot connect to wifi networks Everything worked fine until I had a kernel upgrade. Now I cannot connect to any wifi network. Here is the log. A: Try to fix your internet connection settings in the following way: Run the following command in the terminal: `sudo dhclient wlan0` You should now be connected to the internet. In case of no connection after that try also to execute the following commands: Run the following command in the terminal: `sudo rmmod iwlmvm` This should disable any already loaded iwlmvm module.
