It's almost mid-September, and like most players around the league, his focus remains rooted on his team and not the distraction that is the Yankees' home field. "We need to play it like it's a road game, and for the most part, I think that's what we've done," Girardi said Friday morning. "We've been pretty good." The team's road record this season is 46-26, better than any other team in the American League, and that's largely due to the Yankees' .632 road winning percentage that's the best in the Majors. The Yankees have been within two runs in 17 of their past 22 road games. If you're looking for the reason the team seems to have some extra juice when it goes on the road, there are several explanations. The Yankees are the last team to leave spring training and they have a propensity for a quick turnaround, only leaving St. Petersburg after just five games, instead of the usual seven. That allowed them to get off to a fast start and create momentum. "They're big on getting off to a good start," Alex Rodriguez said. "I think the other thing is that everyone here does a good job of just not thinking about what's going on at home." Then, of course, there's the legendary food at Yankee Stadium, long a topic of discussion. Home cooking might have something to do with it as well. "You see a guy like Mariano [Rivera] who's won the World Series here, a guy who's won the Cy Young Award here," Girardi said, "it's got to be something special." The Yankees' impressive road record could be due in part to the team's ability to have some success in the postseason. Eleven of the team'
