A: The issue may be with the installer trying to run the checksum command before the install is completed (the installer is actually a bootstrapper). Before it runs, it is trying to run the checksum code (which is trying to run a command 'rm' which it does not have access to). A conventional flexible wiring board, in which an electrical connection is made by a solder, wire bonding, or the like, is generally used for a large quantity of IC packages or the like. Recently, as a new bonding technique for the IC package, a technique has been developed in which the connection is performed by forming a solder ball or the like between a PCB and an IC or the like for the purpose of downsizing and increasing a mounting density. With this new technique, there is a problem that the yield of the connection is low. This is because a connection failure, such as pin penetration, occurs. A connection failure includes a failure with a pad (in this specification, the pad is defined as a part where an electrical connection is formed) where soldering or bonding occurs, and a failure with a connection line itself. Among them, a failure with a connection line itself is a failure of electrical connection caused by a change in the connection line shape caused by the connection of a device, such as an IC, or a connection failure due to stress concentration caused by a difference in the thermal expansion coefficients between the connection line and its surrounding material. In the case of the connection failure with a connection line itself, a connection test that is performed after a PCB and a ball are connected is not sufficient for detecting the connection failure. This is because the change in the shape of the connection line is not significant or the connection failure is inconspicuous for some reason during the connection test. Therefore, in order to increase the yield of the connection, it is necessary to reliably detect the connection failure during a connection test.Cancer is one of the most prevalent and deadly diseases in the world. According to the American Cancer Society, cancer has overtaken heart diseases as the number one cause of death in the United States. For example, lung, breast and colon cancers are the leading cancers among both sexes. Of the more than 1.2 million new cancer cases diagnosed in the United States each year, approximately 85% of them present with late-stage disease and are largely incurable. Breast cancer, the most common cancer among women, accounts for over one quarter of all cancer cases.
