Symptoms, treatments and consequences of precocious puberty in girls. Precocious puberty is a common condition in childhood, with an incidence between 1:1,000 and 1:10,000 children. It is commonly described as the appearance of the secondary sex characteristics prior to the age of 8 years in girls and 9 in boys. It is estimated to be present in approximately 5% of females, and 20% of boys. This review will discuss the development, treatment, and consequences of pre-pubertal symptoms, and the impact of the timing of therapy in the context of what can cause the symptoms in the first place.
